Thank you for your message to the Prime Minister at pm.gov.au. For your records, a copy of your message is set out at the bottom of this email.

If your message relates to COVID-19, the Australian Government has established <https://www.australia.gov.au> for up to date advice on how you can protect yourself and your family. Information includes an online symptom checker, travel bans and restrictions, guidance for receiving financial support, health and prevention information and key updates from the Prime Minister and the National Cabinet.

All items of correspondence are read and carefully considered, however not all items will receive a response. When responses are sent, these items will be sent via the same method in which they are received; via email or Australia Post

In some cases, where appropriate, your correspondence will be referred to other Federal Ministers or state/territory governments for their consideration. This will occur when the issue raised falls within their responsibilities.

This is an automatically generated email. Please do not reply to this email as this address is not monitored.

Dear Prime Minister

Re Australia's ongoing disproportionate and ill-targeted response to the coronavirus, including the highly questionable use of mass testing, FYI, please see below my recent rapid response published on The BMJ (aka The British Medical Journal), the referenced version of which is accessible via this link: <https://www.bmj.com/content/371/bmj.m4460/rr-2>

Coronavirus mass testing - a gross waste of money and resources

Dear Editor

England's health secretary, Matt Hancock, says "Mass testing is a vital tool to help us control this virus and get life more normal".[1]

I disagree. Extraordinary amounts of money and resources are being expended on testing around the world - is this justifiable?

In Australia 9,872,011 tests have been conducted with 0.3% being positive.[2]

According to Gareth Iacobucci's report, "as at 16 November the Liverpool pilot had tested 100,000 asymptomatic people, of whom 700 (0.7%) tested positive for covid-19".[1] [3]

In the Australian and Liverpool examples, there appears to be a huge waste of resources with this mass testing, with more than 99% of the tests being negative.

How much is all this testing costing, not just money and direct resources, but also in causing disruption in people's lives, worry about results, loss of productivity etc?

A WHO report providing guidance for surveillance during an influenza pandemic, published in 2017, recommends "case-based reporting (the counting of individual cases) should cease once there is broad community transmission in a country - at this point, syndromic data from sentinel sites, hospital-based data and systematic laboratory testing should be used instead".[4]

Doesn't this mean that widespread testing of asymptomatic people should be ceased?

Surely scarce money and resources can be better targeted in the coronavirus response? As Professor Allyson Pollock says, mass screening proposals risk causing harm through "significant diversion of healthcare resources".[1]

Ongoing testing and questionable 'case' numbers are being used to implement drastic limitations on people's freedom of movement and association around the world, including lockdowns which interfere with people's right to earn their own living, to freely associate with others, to simply live their lives freely.

There must be an urgent reappraisal of the worth of mass testing.
